

Amanda Guralski, cofounder of bizMe, is quickly becoming the bizstyle voice of her generation. Amanda presents a dynamic and energetic approach to the hot career topics of personal branding, networking, and building successful career relationships. Peer-to-peer coaching is the foundation of Amanda's presentation as she addresses topics emerging from the technology addicted Gen Yers—focusing on issues ranging from reputation management to revitalizing soft skills.

Amanda has created the perfect career coach for today's young professional in bizMe.biz, an online magazine. Updated monthly, bizMe offers professional and lifestyle advice with articles that reflect a "just like you and me" conversation. bizMe is real life—it's the nine-to-five, the happy hour, the workout time, and the end-of-the-week freedom.

Amanda is currently booking speaking engagements for 2010 and is available to speak at your school, organization, event, or conference. She will definitely motivate your audience with her enthusiasm and easy-going charisma!

"Amanda is an engaging, effective presenter. The students in my Life After College course at Alverno were, invigorated, inspired and enthusiastically responsive--Amanda raises the bar for her audience on identifying and implementing proactive measures. Part of my evidence of her success is that three of my students made contact or scheduled time to meet w/ professionals (one being Amanda herself) they previously knew only by reputation. Well done, Amanda!"

Joanna Patterson, Asst. Director Career Education, Alverno College

"I'm glad there are still people like her who knows how to give back and share her success with others. Through her presentations she gets you excited and makes you think seriously about your future. It's even exciting just talking about Amanda and what she is doing. You can always expect honesty and optimism from her - leaving you with a strong lasting impression of her energy and passion for her life and for others."

Mee Xiong, Student at Alverno College
